Engineer Steve Ferradino offers advice to Capt. Robert Gattas, as they and other members of the crew at the San Antonio Fire Station work to complete an addition to the station. Much of the money to finance the project was provided by area residents, and the firefighters built the structure on their own time.

Firefighters build addition to station on own time

"Some people think all we do is sit around and play checkers," said engineer Steve Ferradino with a good-natured shrug. "Maybe when they see this, we'll change their minds a little."

Ferradino gave a nod toward the nearly completed addition to the San Antonio Fire Station at Euclid Avenue and 24th Street. The angular structure, housing county Engine No. 12, was built by the 17 firefighters on their own time, with funds collected primarily from San Antonio Heights residents.

"The people who live up here have been really supportive," added Ferradino. "They've contributed about $2,500 in a door-to-door solicitation drive we've been doing — that's way over two-thirds the cost of the whole project."

The germ of the idea came a little more than a year ago. Some of the station's equipment was being stored in an open area behind the main building, exposed to the elements.

"That's hard on a truck," said Capt. Robert Gattas. "We really needed some way to protect it."

The county, which operates the station in conjunction with the California Division of Forestry, allotted $1,200 seed money for materials. The firefighters were left to find the rest for themselves.

"We figure it will cost a total of about $3,500," said Ferradino. "That's not bad for an addition — of course, the labor was pretty cheap."

First the old stone wall behind the station had to be removed to make way for the new room, and station personnel poured a cement slab to serve as a base.

"We didn't have too much experience in these things," said Ferradino, apologizing for the rough cement steps in the back of the structure. "We didn't have much in the way of tools, either."

He said many of the men brought equipment from home to work on the project.

"We had a couple of guys with experience in construction, but for the most part it was, well, a learning time," said Ferradino.

The main building was constructed in the 1930s, and the new addition will be painted to match the lime green color.

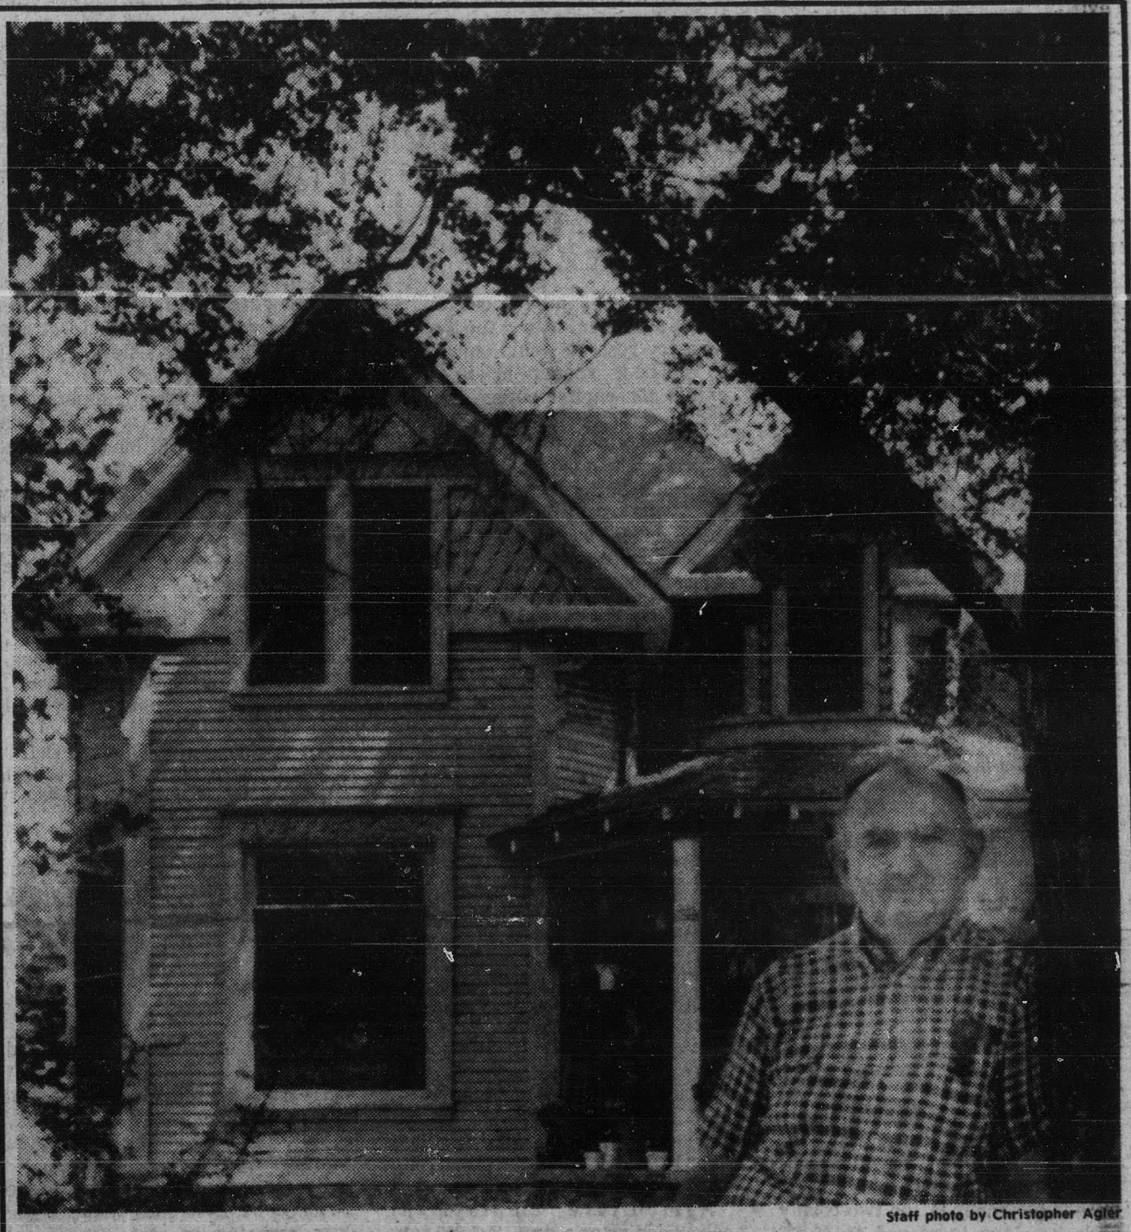

"We sharpened up our carpentry skills, and I got to figure out how to put the roof on," said Ferradino. "I guess if it leaks, we know whose fault it is."

Work on the addition has been sporadic, held up by busy fire seasons and the winter rains, according to Ferradino. It is nearly finished now, however.

Gattas pointed out the finishing details that still need attention, like cabinets on the inside, a door, and insulation so the building may be used as a training area. Once the final paint stroke dries, however, the firefighters said letters of appreciation will be sent to Heights residents along with an invitation to an open house to celebrate the new addition.

"We'll probably put up a plaque with the names of all the guys who helped work on it," said Ferradino, "but we've been signing our names all over the place, mostly where you'd never see them."

Ferradino said a bonus benefit to the project is the increased communication with the community.

World traveler William Hawkinson has a piece of Upland history to come home to between trips — the family homestead built in 1896 by his grandfather. Hawkinson is leaning against an oak tree planted in 1916 on the day he was born. He is still far from settling down, he says.

Quaint homestead draws man to Upland

By DINAH ROSE

When William Hawkinson retired two weeks ago after 42 years of teaching, friends presented him with a weighty bronze plaque.

In addition to the expected accolades for his devoted service (including 36 years without a single absence), the plaque listed a few of Hawkinson's unique qualities — such as his travels to 215 countries, 1,230 lectures to groups on those travels, accompanied by more than 30,000 slides, the dubious honor of being mugged 11 times in 10 different countries (twice in Brazil), his habit of traveling whenever possible for $5 per day and the fact (undisputed by the guest of honor) that he never refused free food.

As one may ascertain, Hawkinson is a traveler. A schedule of summers off as a teacher plus three sabbaticals gave him the time he needed for his hobby. A rather successful career as an investor supplied the funds.

At 65, Hawkinson has no plans of slowing down. Instead, freedom from a job will allow him to lengthen the list of travels.

At the end of this month, he will leave for the Carribean to visit friends for about six weeks; he'll return to make a couple of talks, then will be off again to Korean then on to Japan to join a group in a hike from Tokyo to Kyoto.

From there, he plans to proceed to the Philippines and in December on to New Zealand where he'll participate in a four-day hike known as the Milford Trek.

In between his jaunts, Hawkinson will come back to the family homestead. A majestic house, hidden by the trees in an Upland neighborhood, the home was built in 1896 by his grandfather, Nels Hawkinson.

The interior is decorated with intricately carved oak — from a massive wooden bannister to delicate open work in an archway.

"My grandfather was a real craftsman," said Hawkinson. "Most of this was done on a lathe turned by foot."

He pointed to the richly hued ceiling. "He brought that from Minnesota when they moved out here."

The mustard yellow home is a treasure house for lovers of stained glass and Tiffany chandeliers. Much of the wooden furniture was also fashioned by the talented hands of the grandfather.

Hawkinson said he hasn't really lived in the house for many years. As a math teacher at Los Angeles Valley Community College, he had a home closer to his job. A boarder in an upstairs room has occupied the family homestead.

Hawkinson has never married, and it's a statement he makes with a slight trace of regret.

"I'd certainly enjoy having children and grandchildren now, but I've certainly been happy with my life," he said. "I suppose you have to make trade-offs."

He is not at a loss for friends, however. He tallied five separate retirement parties thrown in his honor during June — the largest of which had 96 guests.

"I bought a bottle of wine in Spain back in 1954," he said. "It was vintage 1847 — and I only paid $8 for it at the time.

"I was planning on opening it on my wedding day, but since it seems as if that may be a while off yet, I opened it up at the party."

Everyone, save five or six who chose not to drink, got a taste of the 134-year-old wine.

"I was afraid it would have changed to vinegar — but it was fine," said Hawkinson.

He has avoided overcrowding the house with souvenirs of his travels, but does have a few objects he treasures.

There's one half of a walking stick used when he hiked to the top of Mt. Fuji. "My girlfriend at the time, who made the trip with me, has the other half."

The house also has a collection of pictures of the Hawkinson clan and the homestead in an earlier day when the massive trees on the grounds were still man-sized.

Surrounded by groves when it was built, the house is now in the heart of the city. Hawkinson himself once owned six groves, but has sold all but one.

He intends to continue traveling. Shortly before his 66th birthday he will depart to participate in a 32-day car rally, beginning in Peking and finishing in Paris, stopping in Mongolia, Siberia, Moscow and hundreds of other sites along the way.

"I'm not entering the competitive portion of the race," he said with a chuckle. "I'm just going for the fun." The route will trace the course taken in a similar rally 75 years ago.

Filled with the good humor of a man who has pursued the things he wanted to pursue during his lifetime, Hawkinson nods in agreement with a quote attributed to him on the retirement plaque.

"If I could relive my life, I would do the same thing over again."

West End MIA families still fighting to find out

By MARGE GROSS
Staff Writer

Are Lt. Col. Michael "Bat" Masterson and Roy Townley dead? Or are they alive and prisoners in Southeast Asia?

The families of the two men shot down during the Vietnam conflict want the United States government to negotiate with Hanoi for an accounting of all the missing in action servicemen and civilians in Southeast Asia.

Janet Townley of Ontario and Fran Masterson of Upland have returned from Washington, D.C., where they attended the 11th annual meeting of the National League of Families of American Prisoners and Missing in Southeast Asia.

Townley is the daughter of Capt. Townley, a civilian Air America co-pilot who was shot down over Laos in 1971, and Masterson is the wife of the Air Force jet pilot shot down over Laos in 1968.

The two women, along with Susie Townley Hall of Phelan, held a press conference Saturday under the Freedom Tree planted for Townley in January of 1973 in Magnolia Park, Upland. Also attending was Rep. David Dreier, R-35th District, who will introduce a resolution Monday in Congress to direct the United States Postal Service to issue a commemorative stamp in honor of "all American servicemen and civilians still unaccounted for as a result of the conflict in Indochina."

"There are men alive over there (Southeast Asia)," Masterson said, "and we've go to get them home ... I have been fighting for 13 years to have an accounting from Hanoi! Is my husband dead or alive?" Col. Masterson was officially declared dead by the State Department in 1978, but only through Pentagon decision, not from factual information from Hanoi.

"I was with Janet Dodge shortly after she knew her husband was one of the three bodies just released by Haoni," Masterson said with her eyes blazing, "It was awful! I felt guilty about my emotions because I felt at least she knows! She's got her grief now but she knows — and that grief was as bad as when she first learned her husband was missing."

Masterson said, "We are going to make Congress aware of this issue. We've got to make everyone aware."

Lt. Gen. Eugene Tighe in June testified before the Subcommittee on Asian and Pacific Affairs and stated that his personal conviction that there are American servicemen still living in Indochina and are being held against their will.

Dreier said he believes the Reagan Administration, more than any administration since Richard Nixon, is, in Reagan's words, "determined to obtain the fullest possible accounting of these brave Americans."

Townley was living and flying out of Vientiane when he was declared missing. His mother, Imo Townley, lives in Ontario, and his wife, Vergie, resides in Albuquerque, N.M. A daughter, Diane Nichols, lives in Phelan.

Masterson was known to have bailed out of his jet, but nothing was ever heard about him again. His wife has been active in putting pressure on the government to negotiate for an accounting of 2,500 servicemen still missing. All have been declared legally dead by the government.

A Montclair serviceman listed as missing in action is Air Force Tech. Sgt. Charles Bebas of Montclair who was shot down in 1972 while on a B-52 bombing mission over Hanoi. He was the son of Russell Bebus and the late Dorothy M. Bebus.

The Pomona MIA is Naval Air Lt. Fred J. Fortner whose jet went down near Hanoi in 1967. He was a native of Upland and a brother, Ernest Fortner, lived in Upland. His parents were Mr. and Mrs. Fred M. Fortner.

Daily Report efforts to locate the families of Bebus and Fortner were not successful.

Powerful House panel

Dreier joins Banking Committee

By DON GREEN
Staff Writer

Rep. David Dreier has been named to the House Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs, traditionally one of the powerful committees on Capitol Hill.

In making the move, Dreier, R-35th District, drops his positions on the Government Operations Committee and its subcommittees. He retains his positions on the Small Business Committee and its subcommittees.

Dreier was unavailable for comment Wednesday, but aides to the congressman hailed the new assignment as a move up the ladder of the House hierarchy for the 28-year-old freshman.

The opening arose when Rep. Henry Hyde, R-Ill., shifted to the Foreign Affairs Committee after the death of Rep. Kenneth Grier, D-Ohio.

Brad Smith of Dreier's staff said 11 Republican congressmen, including some senior members, sought Hyde's position on the Banking Committee.

Dreier spoke to each member of the party's committee on committees, which recommended him for the post, Smith said. Its recommendation was endorsed by the party caucus and confirmed by the full House.

Dreier was assigned to three subcommittees on Friday. They are Housing and Community Development, International Development, Institutions and Finance, and International Trade, Investment and Monetary Policy.

In a press release, he said, "Monetary policy is the next step in President Reagan's program for economic recovery. Reducing interest rates is imperative if the private sector is to survive."

The Banking Committee has traditionally been an important House committees because of its responsibilities over domestic monetary policy, investment, trade and other economic concerns.

Its chairman for many years was Wright Patman, D-Texas, one of the most powerful figures in Congress. Patman died in 1976.

Rep. Fernand St. Germain, D-R.I., is the current chairman. The committee has 45 members.

Smith said Dreier was particularly interested in serving on the Housing and Community Development Subcommittee in hopes of reducing mortgage rates and in meeting the needs of small businesses.

Forest area closed

Public entry into the San Bernardino National Forest above Rancho Cucamonga has been halted because of fire danger, forestry officials said.

The closed area includes Cucamonga Canyon and the U.S. Forest Service said hikers, swimmers, fishermen and those driving a vehicle in that area can be fined up to $500 and face six months imprisonment.

The area will remain closed until the fire danger decreases because of winter rains.

$18.6 million Chaffey College budget OK'd

By STEVE STANDERFER
Staff Writer

Chaffey College's final 1981-82 budget of $18.6 million was approved on a 3-1 vote by trustees at a special meeting Thursday.

For more than two hours trustees talked about the budget and directed the staff to make cuts in spending of another $601,687 in order to provide a larger contingency reserve fund.

Trustees found out Thursday from business manager Donald Sorsabal that further adjustments to the budget had reduced the projected contigency reserve from $335,000 to an estimated $66,822.

Even with the additional $601,687, the district would still fall about $230,000 short of the $900,000 the trustees had hoped to have for contingencies.

But, Sorsabal said this morning a reserve of $668,000 will give the college enough money to maintain the cash flow without having to borrow money. Having an adequate cash flow was one of Sorsabal's concerns in developing the budget.

The additional money for the contingency reserve would come from 50 percent reductions in block grants for capital outlay, supplies and operating expenses.

"We will actively reduce expenditure levels in the course of normal operations," Sorsabal said.

"My major concern now is the low tentative reserve level ...(is) not sufficient," trustee Robert Edmonson said today. "To counter that, the board is requiring that the administration continue — primarily in the institutional and block grant areas — to restrict expenditures and find $600,000.

"You're cutting awfully deep when you cut 50 percent of your block grants." Edmonson said his concern was over how such cuts would affect people.

Ways to cut the $601,687 are expected to come from various groups of the campus body in the next 90 days.

S.B.-Riverside joblessness rises 0.8%

Despite an increase of 4,600 agricultural jobs, the unemployment rate in San Bernardino and Riverside counties climbed to 7.8 percent in June, the state Employment Development Department reported.

Unemployment in the two-county area for June increased to 45,900 from 41,100 in May. The corresponding unemployment rate climbed from 7 percent in May to 7.8 percent.

The current jobless total compares favorably with the 48,200 estimated in June 1980 when the unemployment rate was 8.4 percent.

Employment analysts reported that large seasonal losses in government, services and agriculture will push unemployment to its highest level for the summer. They expect July and August employment to decline significantly.

Agriculture employment rebounded after a drop of 2,800 jobs between April and May to a strong rise of 4,600 from May to June. The large increase was attributed to the start of the cantaloupe harvest and to the acceleration of vineyard thinning and suckering operations.

Services and government jobs suffered the biggest losses in the month-long reporting period.

Services — including medical and health, hotels and motels, recreational groups, garages and repair services — lost 900 jobs mainly because of the end of the tourist season in the desert area.

Government payrolls were reduced by 1,700 jobs with all the loss reported in state and local government as educational facilities closed for the summer. Current government employment of 100,500 compares with 102,300 public jobs a year ago.

The construction and trade groups each lost 200 jobs for the month, while employment in manufacturing held steady.

County health agency exec quits

By DON GREEN
Staff Writer

After seven sometimes stormy years in the post, Robert Russell has announced his resignation as administrator of the county Health Care Services Agency.

His resignation was announced in a letter to the Board of Supervisors and will be effective at the end of September.

As head of the agency that supervises the county medical center, Russell has been criticized in recent years because of the center's financial troubles.

County loans have been used to help the medical center pay its bills and have occasionally angered the Board of Supervisors. In one exchange with local Supervisor Cal McElwain last December, Russell said he "should be relieved" of his responsibilities if the medical center could not repay $3.2 million by June.

But Russell expressed confidence that the medical center is now on firmer financial footing, and board Chairman Bob Hammock said the board had not requested Russell's resignation.

In the past year, the county has implemented new collection procedures.

Church assumes city parks' lunch program

By STEVE SCAUZILLO
Staff Writer

Eunice Samuel and Debbie Bennet sat in undersized chairs behind a children's work table in the fan-cooled nursery run by the church. The children were amazingly quiet during the hot afternoon as Samuel and Bennet sifted through the week's food receipts from the new church-run lunch program.

With a bit of amazement at their own words, they read off some figures:

"Sixty-nine pounds of bologna and the same amount of salami; 200 loaves of bread; four boxes of bananas and four of oranges; 1,050 eggs and 2,244 half-pints of milk."

The food was used to prepare approximately 500 lunches a day for five days—orientation week for this year's summer food service program operating in Ontario and funded by the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

A last-ditch effort by the people of the Mt. Zion Baptist Church, 224 W. California St., rescued the ill-fated summer lunch program and brought it back to three south Ontario parks last week after a year layoff.

Last summer, the church ran a smaller lunch program which operated exclusively from the church and served only 75 to 100 children. When they found out the city, which had sponsored the program for the previous six years, was not doing so last year, they applied for the sponsorship.

"I was pleased with the church when they decided to help the kids," said Samuel, church member and director of the program.

Samuel said calls began coming in to the city parks which has previously sponsored the program, asking if it would be operating this year.

"When we were approved, the response was real good. We We're glad to provide the service," she added.

After a week and a half, Samuel said things were running well. The program, which started a week later than usual on July 27, will run until Sept. 11.

"I think it's beautiful but it's a challenge, believe me,' ' said Debbie Bennet, assistant program director.

Each weekday morning, Bennet and Samuel make sure the food is packaged into nutritional lunches by the hired workers, and then transported to De Anza, Unity and Bon View Parks. There, nine supervisors, church members who receive minimum wage for their work, make sure the lunches are distributed to children under 18 years old and are eaten on park premises.

These are some of the regulations imposed by the Department of Agriculture, which reimburses the sponsoring group on a per child formula.

"We make sure we leave the areas clean. We haven't had any complaints yet," said Bennet.

"They have good control and have got a good handle on what they are doing," said Ontario Recreation Supervisor John Kramer after receiving positive site inspection reports from his staff.

Reasons reneging on sponsoring the program vary. One city official said problems in staffing was the reason.

Riverside County reservoir problem

Algae in water may cause taste, odor problem for some in area

By STEVE STANDERFER
Staff Writer

Some West End residents may experience a taste and odor problem with tap water caused by common algae growing in a Riverside County reservoir.

The annual problem poses no health hazard, according to officials with the Metropolitan Water District of Southern California.

Residents of Chino and Montclair are the ones most likely to notice changes in their water. However, water officials in those two cities said the water from Lake Mathews is only used to supplement regular well water supplies.

Mike McGuire, water quality engineer for MWD, said the exact event that triggers the growth of blue-green algae in Lake Mathews is unknown.

"The algae bloom is related to daily temperatures," he said, "and the unseasonably warm weather we've been having has triggered the bloom earlier this year than in prior summers.

"Heat is not the only factor, however, and we are continually doing research to prevent this problem."

Lake Mathews is the terminal reservoir on Metropolitan's Colorado River aqueduct system that transports water into Southern California from near Lake Havasu on the California-Arizona border. The lake contains about 130,000 acre-feet of water, or more than 42 billion gallons.

Ontario receives anywhere from zero to 25 percent of its water from Lake Mathews, according to Glenn Cadzow, a water analyst. However, the city has a water filtration plant that "eliminates a good share of these problems," he said.

Metropolitan water is filtered and chlorinated before being mixed with well water in Ontario. Like other cities, Ontario uses the Metro water only as a supplement.

Bob Thompson, general manager of the Monte Vista Water District, said a maximum of 2 percent of the water that now serves Montclair comes from Lake Mathews.

Thompson said "we have cut down considerably" on the use of Metropolitan water after learning of the algae problem Thursday.

"Hopefully, we didn't get too much of that in our system," he said. "It's just one of those things that we have to live with in Southern California."

Lloyd Michael of the Cucamonga County Water District, said his agency is receiving only 5 percent of its water from the Metropolitan Water District — and no water from Lake Matthews.

The district, which serves the Rancho Cucamonga area, receives MWD water from the state water project in Northern California.

But in Chino, residents have been notified that a portion of their water is coming from Lake Matthews, according to civil engineer Ahmad Mohseni.

The city purchases an uninterruptible supply of water from MWD during the hot summer months and discontinues the purchases during fall, winter and spring.

Most of the city's water is drawn from local underground wells and is not affected by the algae problem, Mohseni said.

While the quality of the Lake Matthews water is not as good as the well water, the water is safe for consumption, he said.

"They do tests and it passes the tests," he said. "We really haven't got any complication."

McGuire advised water users not to boil water since that only concentrates the organic matter

MWD spokesman Howard Williams suggested anyone noticing a slightly musty taste and earthy odor can help mitigate the problem by cooling the water in the refrigerator.

Women's Aglow to meet

The Rancho Cucamonga Chapter of Women's Aglow Fellowship will meet at 7 p.m. Aug. 17 for a dinner in the Banquet Room of the Ontario Holiday Inn.

Speaker will be Jackie Johnson, who is serving as president of the Southeastern Area of Women's Aglow and has been both vice president and president of Pomona Aglow and vice president of leadership on the area board of Southeastern Area of Southern California.

A teacher and speaker for Bible studies and seminars, she gives practical application on how to apply God's principles to problems detrimental to family relations.

All women are invited and should make reservations by noon Thursday by calling 987-2842, 989-5944, 989-5663 or 987-4133. There will be a fee.

12th annual ball

OPARC gala Sept. 12 on a Western theme

Cowgirls and cowboys will be at the 1981 fund-raising benefit for the Ontario-Pomona Association for Retarded Citizens Sept. 12 when the OPARC Auxiliary stages a dinner dance at Red Hill Country Club, Cucamonga.

"Little Bit Country" is the 12th annual theme being used by the OPARC Auxiliary. Over the past 11 years, more than $150,000 has been raised for the OPARC Day School, infant stimulation program and Diversified Industries Inc.

Mrs. Earl Vander Schaaf of Chino, ball chairman, and her committee will carry out the Western theme in decorations, entertainment and optional western dress.

Featured will be dinner, dancing, silent and live auctions and Las Vegas-type games.

Working with Mrs. Vander Schaaf are the following committee chairmen: the Mmes. James Weiland, finance; Ralph Proctor, decorations; Bart Palenchar, invitations; David Walker, casino; Louis Catalano, entertainment; George Yetter, cuisine; Howard Snider, thank you notes; Bill Hill, auction; Claude Ellena, special tickets; William Vander Laan, poster child; Vander Schaaf, guardian angel tables; Charles Rupert, silent auction; Jean Farrar, prizes; Charles Saulls, reservations; and James McLauchlin, program advertising and layouts.

Marie Vander Schaaf will be chairman of the hostesses, and Bill Hill will serve as master of ceremonies and auctioneer.

Your baby's world

Learning is by touching

One of the earliest ways of learning is through the sense of touch.

Growing Child, a monthly child development newsletter, reports that long after a baby has gained control of her eyes — at about four months — and has begun to learn through them, she will continue to learn by holding, touching, handling, and mouthing objects.

The world is full of many things which have different "feels."

One of a child's earliest ways of learning about what is "out there" is through touching and being touched.

The idea that some things are the "same" and some are "different" is one of the most basic of all early learnings.

One way to help a child learn more about the "same and different" is to give her many opportunities to feel all those interesting "feels" in the world out there.

The active, even fussy, baby never lacks for stimulation of lifting and handling.

However, the placid, or "good" baby may be deprived of stimulation because she never makes demands on her parents.

All babies, active or placid, can benefit from gentle stimulation.

Before her bath, place your baby on her stomach and gently stroke and rub her back, arms, and legs with your hand. Pat her gently all over or tap her with your fingertips.

Sometimes rub her gently with something soft and velvety.

After bath, don't just pat her dry. Rub her arms, legs, stomach and back with a soft towel. Kiss her head, hands, feet.

Play with her toes as you talk to her. Pat her feet together. Make bubbling noise against the skin in the hollow of her neck.

A ticklish baby is often hypersensitive to touch because she has not had enough stimulation of her sense of touch.

If your baby is ticklish, begin by using her own hands to rub and pat her body. As she learns to trust her own touch, you can gradually begin using your own hand.

Remember, too, that a very light touch is more "tickly" than a firmer touch.

A gentle but firm touch with the whole palm of your hand is less apt to "tickle" than a feather-like stroking with the tips of your fingers.

Be caseful to proceed cautiously with a ticklish baby. Watch her face and be sensitive to her responses, and you will be able to develop normal sensation.

You can get more information on this subject and on the physical and social development of children up to six years old by writing to Growing Child, 22 N. Second St., P.O. Box 620N, Lafayette, Ind. 47902. When writing, include child's birthdate.

Four plans for handling OIA traffic pondered

By RICHARD PERAZA
Staff Writer

West End officials are pondering over a stack of reports in hopes of deciding on the best way to cope with traffic Ontario International Airport is expected to generate by 1995.

Members of the airport's Ground Access Committee were to have endorsed one of four proposed methods of coping with traffic last week but opted instead to review the studies more and make their decision Aug. 21, according to Larry Foutz, project manager.

"The department (Los Angeles Department of Airports, operators of OIA) and the city (of Ontario) both asked for a delay to the next steering committee meeting before they decide on an alternative," he said.

The four basic options presented are an "airport focus" system which addresses only direct access to OIA, a "Haven emphasis" version of that proposal which also beefs up some surrounding area streets, a "roadway plus interchange" proposal which includes alterations to freeway offramps in the vicinity and a "transit" proposal which would accommodate increased use of mass transit.

According to Foutz, the project's technical committee is backing the "roadway plus interchange" proposal, calling it "the maximum necessary improvement to the local Ontario access system."

The project would widen portions of Haven, Jurupa, Archibald and Grove avenues, along with portions of Airport Drive. It would provide wider overpasses over Interstate 10, install several new synchronized signals to speed traffic and would install some new freeway off- and on-ramps, according to studies.

One of those new interchanges would be at Haven Avenue and state Route 60. The Interstate 10 ramps at Archibald and Holt Boulevard would need reconstruction. Some of the streets to be widened would end up six lanes across.

The improvements would complete Ontario's planned roadway system for the east portion of the city, but the new freeway ramps at Archibald and development of Haven Avenue would also benefit Rancho Cucamonga, according to the text.

Traffic flow should be good on all arterials and even 1995 peak traffic jams should be able to keep moving at a minimum speed of 17 miles per hour, it said.

But the system won't be cheap. Estimated construction costs top $36.5 million. In addition, if local mass transit systems are to take advantage of it, they will have to invest about $1.76 million in new equipment and expect an annual $2.47 million operating cost to serve the airport area.

The airport focus alternative is the least expensive of the proposals with estimated construction costs of about $25.3 million.

However, the studies are quick to point out the lower cost is because it addresses only direct access for airport traffic. It does nothing to improve roadways for motorists as they approach the airport area.

It would widen portions of Haven, Archibald, Grove and Jurupa avenues and portions of Airport Drive; but only portions very near the airport site. Some signals would be added and one Archibald Avenue overpass across Interstate 10 would be widened.

The study states traffic conditions would be fair but there could be very low speeds and congestion around key intersections.

The "Haven emphasis" plan includes all that but also proposes to relieve congestion on Archibald and Milliken avenues by making Haven Avenue a six-lane arterial. It would provide good traffic circulation around the airport but wouldn't do anything to relieve congestion at freeway on and off ramps.

Extra expansion of Haven carries an extra price tag, with total construction cost estimated at $36.7 million. That's over $11 million more than the cost of the "airport focus" plan alone.

The transit proposal is much like the roadway plus interchange plan but it isn't quite as extensive. That's because it is designed to cut down on projected traffic by taking extra steps to accommodate and encourage mass transit systems.

"A transit system would be designed to carry 20 percent of all person trips on either public or private transit," the report stated. "The base system... would consist of express transit service between ONT (OIA) and Riverside, Anaheim, San Bernardino and El Monte operated on 20-minute headways."

It said regular local transit systems should be rerouted to serve the airport and hourly express service should link it with downtown Los Angeles.

It would require expansion of Archibald, Haven, Grove and Jurupa avenues, and widening of Airport Drive, re-design of some freeway interchanges and construction of new ones.

It would require 27 buses with luggage compartments, new park-and-ride lots, lighted bus shelters and transit information centers at the airport and special bus bays at the terminal.

The study suggests construction of two parking lots on the outskirts of the airport to keep cars out of the most congested areas and suggests providing shuttle service between the lots and terminal.

It also says that the state should build a rail station on Haven Avenue. Although planned commuter trains won't help incoming and outgoing air passengers much, they could be convenient for OIA employees, the study said.

It said the cities of Rancho Cucamonga and Ontario should establish regulations requiring businesses in the airport area to encourage employees to car pool. The report said the state should also encourage car pooling by designating special car-pool freeway lanes in the area.

Construction costs for road alterations under the transit plan would top $29.8 million and construction costs for the mass transit projects would total another $17.6 million, according to the study. Annual operating cost of the transit system was estimated at about $6.28 million.

81-year-old is a picture of health; facts prove it

By DARLA WELLES
Copley News Service

SAN DIEGO — Don't try to tell Noel Johnson that infirmity and aging to hand in hand.

And don't try to tell him to slow down and take it easy.

Johnson, who will soon celebrate his 82nd birthday, will politely but firmly disagree with both ideas.

He doesn't believe people need to degenerate and die at the relatively early ages of 60 or 70. He considers himself proof of that view.

And while he makes no claim to immortality, he hopes to prove himself to be a bit less mortal than most by living well past the 100-year mark.

And given his health status, as analyzed by exercise physiologists at San Diego State University, he may well be on the way to realizing that hope.

Johnson is considered something of a medical oddity and a researcher's delight since there are few statistics available on the effects of exercise training on persons his age.

Most studies top out with subjects at about the age of 69, although a few subjects have been observed into their early 70s.

But then not too many people past the age of 70 are involved in daily jogging, regiments. And even fewer run marathons, box competitively, and love to go out dancing with ladies about half their ages, all of which Johnson does.

What makes him even more of an oddity is that Johnson led the sedentary life and was going downhill physically until the age of 70 when he took a good look at himself and others of his age and decided he didn't want to settle down on a park bench or in a wheelchair and waste away.

Johnson decided to get on the move. He took up jogging, quit smoking and changed his diet to 90 percent vegetarian.

By 1971 he had shed about 40 excess pounds and had become a rather extraordinary physical specimen for a man his age.

In the fall of that year, physiologists at the University of California - Davis tested his physical capacity and proclaimed him a superman.

And there's been little decline in his conditions since.

"We can't say he's reversing the aging process, but he's sure holding his own against it," said physical education professor and exercise physiologist bill phillips after Johnson's trenuous treadmill test.

Phillips and fellow professor and physiologist Tony Sucec likened Johnson's performance capacity on the treadmill to that of an average man between the ages of 30 and 39.

The assessment is based on measurements of his maximum heart rate achieved during the treadmill run, which reached 162 beats per minute, and on measurements of his anaerobic threshold, the point at which fatigue sets in due to the body reaching its maximum capacity to function with the oxygen consumed.

This threshold was equal to a man roughly half his age.

Noel Johnson, 81 and going strong, dismays researchers with his stamina on the treadmill during exercise tests at San Diego State University. He began turning his life around at age 70.

British pastor observes 'affluent' life in California

By MARGE GROSS
Staff Writer

Staff photo by Marge Gross

The Rev. Roger Nunn, pastor of the Manvers Street Baptist Church in Bath, England, above, has exchanged pulpits, homes and cars for the summer with the Rev. David F. Lehmberg, senior minister of the Claremont Methodist Church. He preaches each Sunday, has studied at the School of Theology in Claremont and has made frank observations of California life.

"California is a consuming society ... like going to the Hollywood Bowl to hear a concert and taking popcorn .. everyone is always consuming something," the Rev. Roger Nunn of Bath, England, said in a recent interview.

"No wonder everyone is jogging," the clergyman added.

Nunn, pastor of the Manvers Street Baptist Church of Bath, and the Rev. David F. Lehmberg, senior minister of the Claremont Methodist Church, have exchanged pulpits, homes and cars for the summer.

"Where do you start?" he asked when queried about his impression of California on his first visit to the West Coast.

"It's very different (from England) ... you have this reliable sunshine and heat. Of course Californians know how to live with it," he said. "I find it is enjoyable for two or three months but I'm not sure I'd want to live here."

The tall clergyman, garbed in tennis shorts and shirt and wearing a definite California tan, said he has found an obsessive, affluent society in California. "The more earned the more for families to spend," he said. "It's a lifestyle geared to enjoyment."

Nunn was not downgrading life in California. He was speaking about the contrast with his country where it is rare to eat out, families live on "a lot less money than here," and people eat much less food.

"Everyone (here) has the desire to have more ... and with energy, you can make a lot of money," he said in his rapid delivery and charming British accent.

In Britian there is more acceptance to one's role in life, he said. "Life here is dominated by cars ... you travel to the beach, everywhere ... (Californians) just get into cars and drive. It's due to the lack of a good rail system ... Los Angeles people would benefit by a good rail system by using public money then paying it off."

This subject lead to his view of the smog situation.

"Smog is talked about all the time," Nunn said. His viewpoint is if the subject of smog was lessened in newspapers, radio and television, people wouldn't think so much about it.

"I haven't experienced an effects at all except you can't see the mountains ..." he said. Nunn did admit he has been aware of smog during a fast game of tennis.

"In London in the 1950s," he said, "we had it so bad you couldn't see 10 feet ahead, but we wiped out our smoke problem." This was accomplished by banning the use of soft coal, particularly in home stoves and fireplaces.

He intimated the California smog problem won't be cured until the citizens rid themselves of the addiction to the car and freedom. "To Americans, freedom is to get into a car," he said.

Nunn's wife, Merril, and children, Tracy, 15, Timothy, 14, and Samantha, 9, joined him two weeks ago. "They are having a marvelous time," he said. "They spent 14 hours at Disneyland yesterday ... they've been to the beach, swimming pools and Knotts."

Nunn, alone, has enjoyed walking in the hills to Mt. Baldy and exploring downtown Los Angeles. "I'm interested in cities in social and cultural aspects ... I wanted to see if they are solving the riot problems which Los Angeles experienced in the 1960s."

Nunn described his city of Bath as "small by Los Angeles standards." The city is "neat," compact and historic. "It's a pleasing city to live in as it has a strong culture and history. The beautiful buildings are Georgian built in the 18th century," Nunn said.

In comparing his Baptist Church in Bath and the Claremont Methodist, he said, "I like the social and political commitments of this parish, the Third World, government policies." Nunn said he lived in Lehmberg's home with them before they departed for England. "In the four weeks, and long talks we were seeing things quite the same."

Nunn contends American churches are going to face a critical point and must take a "stance on the issues of war, peace, politics of other countries and this country."

The British clergyman thinks the style and motivation of his host church is "what we need in England ... the return to the community and personal needs."

"I am not going home and make pronouncements on our church life, but I am struck (here) by how much stronger institutionally the church is over (churches in) Britain ... it is more organized, the office has a full-time secretary," Nunn said. "In my church I have a secretary two mornings a week. In this church there is motivation, a sense of professionalism. The church is run in a more professional way. There is a professional standing in education and administration."

Britain, he contends, is a "society of amateurs." Professionals are not employed in Christian education as the jobs are left to volunteers.

The Rev. Roger Nunn's initial purpose in coming to the United States was to attend a theological school. British ministers are encouraged to take a sabbatical every seven years.

His last such experience was to attend the Vanderbilt School of Theology in Nashville, Tenn., in 1965. He learned about the School of Theology in Claremont and found there he could delve deeper into what he calls "process theology."

Nunn said it was difficult to readily explain "process theology," but "in essence it is a way of thinking where the layman tends to see everything in process rather than static ... it is very liberal and very positive and not a 'death of God' theology."

Basically, Nunn sees the church (as a whole) as showing signs of life and hope. "We've moved out of the 1950s and 1960s' disillusionment and failure to relate faith to the world, and people are turning back to a new hopefulness in the church."

Sunny porch a good flower spot

By BARBARA HARTUNG
Copley News Service

Q. We have the luxury, but also the expense, of a delightful sunporch. How can I decorate this area without jeopardizing the budget for the main part of the house?

Flowers on the walls extend onto the floor through the use of stenciling in this light and inviting porch. Wicker furniture painted white provides a pleasing contrast with the deeper tones of the wallpaper, a Van Luit design.

One wall is in windows and the other three are solid, flat surfaces. — M.V.

A. Decide first what you want out of your sunporch. Is it to function as a lounging spot, a garden room or an entertaining space? Then plan for those needs as well as for aesthetics.

One interior designer accomplished near-magic by wallpapering walls in a bright springtime floral. The background color of the wallpaper who chosen for the color of the wood floor.

After the floor had been painted, perky flowers from the wallpaper were painted on the floor so the stenciled flowers were everywhere. The stenciling isn't too difficult if you are patient and follow the directions available in pant supply or craft shops.

Follow the advertising in the newspaper and frequent the garage sales and thrift shops for cast-off furniture that you can restore to life with a clean coat of paint.

Make yourself some simple tailored Roman shades for the windows in one of the colors taken from the wallpaper. Or hem widths of fabric and hang from curtain rods with clip-on rings.

Accessorize with mirrors, lamps, plants and informal treasures.

Q. Our living room is dark because there are small windows and little natural light. We now have medium-dark beige walls, beige carpeting and a red brick fireplace.

I want to paint the fireplace brick white to lighten the room. Also I'm searching for a new color scheme that will allow me to move away eventually from browns and beige.

However, for the time being I must live with the carpeting. Most other things can be changed and I do plan to even buy a few new upholstered pieces.

What colors would work well with the beige? — .R.C.

A. A very lovely fresh color scheme used frequently today, is a peach, gray, mauve, black and white.

Peach in a very light tone for the wall paint would blend well with the beige carpeting and even give the carpeting a peachy cast. Use an upholstery fabric in peach, gray, mauve, black and white on a sofa. Add a pair of deep peach chairs.

Paint the fireplace a chalky white and accessorize with other white touches as well as pewter, silver or stainless steel.

Q. We have a fairly small family room and I am attempting to decorate it and furnish it to make it seem as large as possible.

Are there certain rules of thumb to follow? I am aware that the room should be in a light color. But that's about as far as I can go. — F.F.

A. Painting your walls a light color is a good start. And glossy finishes are more reflective of light so consider that. Add mirrors to sections of the walls or a mirrored screen to visually enlarge the space.

Use low furniture as opposed to high-backed chairs and sofas and vertical cabinets. Low horizontal lines in furniture and wall arrangements will help.

Robbers plan so poorly that it often works

By STEVE LA RUE
Copley News Service

Bands of armed robbers usually plan their crimes so poorly that they can be expected to don ski masks in full view of passing police cars or attempt holdups at doughnut shops where officers have coffee, says a University of Texas criminologist.

But, said Howard C. Daudistel, small robbery teams are so disorganized and attempt such improbable holdups that they sometimes get away with them.

Daudistel conducted a survey of robberies attempted by teams of up to four participants.

Although the robbers he studied understood the risks of committing their usually spur-of-the-moment crimes, they spent more time building up their courage than they did calculating the loot or planning escapes, he said.

"Very few of the bands had any knowledge of whether the victims they robbed had any money at all, which was surprising to us," Daudistel said.

"In many cases, the robber would say, 'Open the safe,' when there wasn't a safe at all.

In one case, a robber knew so little about security devices at the store he was robbing that he became convinced a ringing telephone was a holdup alarm, returning the money to the clerk, and fled, Daudistel said.

Daudistel told of another case in which "one of the offenders was arrested well after the crime, while he was driving around with his ski mask on. It is surprising how often that happens."

In still another, robbers donned ski masks in a convenience store without realizing that they were on display to passing motorists through the store's display windows. Police enjoyed the view.

The drinking that robber bands often do to fortify their courage before committing the crime often leads to disaster, Daudistel said.

"The most successful group of robbers we found were those who thought about their victims carefully," Daudistel said. One band, he said, committed a skein of pizza parlor robberies despite intense police efforts to apprehend them.

When finally caught, the robbers told Daudistel they selected a particular type of pizza parlor because clerks on duty were part-time high school students. They found that the students were paid the minimum wage and felt so little loyalty that they often were amused that their employers were being robbed.

But this case contrasted starkly with the bulk of robber bands surveyed. those groups had more difficulty organizing their own members than controlling victims, Daudistel said.

It was not unusual that arguments among band members occured at crime scenes over who was going to do what. Frequently, one member of the group had second thoughts and left in the middle of the robbery, Daudistel said, and "Other members of the group were usually not prepared for this."

On the otherhand, the bungling robber hands sometimes stumble into success because they select unexpected targets and confused witnesses.

These people are confused themselves, and they confuse the victims. Victims and witnesses often cannot remember physical differences amoung robbers who share some physical characteristics, and the more commotion there is at a robbery scene, the less they are likely to remember.

To combat this, police in Kansas City, Seattle and San Diego placed disguised cameras in stores that were often held up in the hope of obtaining photos of the robbers.

Police obtained very few photos and found, instead that robberies at these stores fell sharply -- in the range of 70 percent. They are not sure why, but a criminologist theorized many of the robberies may have involved store clerks.

Perception therapy perceived with doubt

By NOEL OSMENT
Copley News Service

SAN DIEGO — For the first time in her life, Kay Ward says, she has learned what it really means to see in three dimensions.

"I had always thought I was seeing in three dimensions," she says. "I saw things as being round and as being separated from each other. But when we went out into the country that day, I saw spaces I had never really seen before. I was saying things to my husband like, 'My God, the hills are so contoury,' "

The 41-year-old woman has experienced some other changes in her life recently. She said she no longer blanches when she climbs a ladder for fear of missing a rung, nor, when she and her husband, Charles, come in from sailing does she have a terrible feeling she will miss the dock and step into the water. And best of all, she said, she is now a faster reader, which will help when she begins taking college courses in the fall.

Susan Hansen, 29, is a researcher at the San Diego Zoo, studying the evolutionary aspects of chromosomes and dealing with the complexities of DNA and RNA. In the fall she will begin graduate school, studying gene regulation and expression at the University of North Corolina.

Her decision to go to graduate school is a recent one. When she graduated from the University of California at San Diego, she resolved never to put herself through the torture of study again.

"I died there," she says. "I hated every minute of it. It was four years of grit — me against the school, telling myself, 'I'm not going to let them flunk me out.' "

As recently as two years ago, neither Ward nor Hansen would have thought she had any kind of vision problem, although both were aware they were slow readers.

They say the changes in their lives came about through visual development therapy, a controversial technique used by some optometrists to overcome perceptual problems.

Both women were patients of suburban Lemon Grove optometrist Robert B. Sanet, who specializes in such therapy. Visual development therapy has been under fire from ophthalmologists who point out that there is no scientific evidence to support that visual development therapy alone can improve the academic achievement of the learning disabled.

Most of Sanet's patients range in age from about 6 through the teens, but include a few adults. Many have been sent to him because of poor academic performance.

Sanet says his success with adults and adolescents belies the insistence by many in the eye-care professions that not much can be done with developmental vision problems after the age of 7.

He cites the case of youngsters such as Loren Lansky, whose parents ad been told nothing could be done about his eye that had turned in since birth.

Although Loren had been diagnosed as early as age 3 months, and had done exercises as a small child, he had very little peripheral vision and, with the one eye not functioning properly, had poor depth perception. His mother, Rita Lansky, said doctors told her that corrective surgery could be of cosmetic help, but nothing more could be done about the functioning of that eye. Since the crossed eye was not extreme, and apparent only when he was tired, the family decided against surgery.

Although Loren tended to read slowly, he had never had any problem with schoolwork. It was other impediments that led the family to take him to Sanet when he was 12.

"We were advised to keep him out of contact sports and keep him out of gym because of the risk of something happening to his good eye," she said.

After approximately a year and a half of therapy, he is now able to play football and baseball with his friends and hit golf balls. And it is less perilous for him to ride a bike, since, with improved peripheral vision, he is less likely to bump into things on his right side, his mother says.

Furthermore, she said, there was a change in the appearance of his eye, noticeable particularly in school photos taken before and after treatment.

The basic course of treatment with Sanet takes about three months. The patient spends a one-hour session in his office once a week, when exercises are administered by therapists, and has daily exercises, such as following a ball on a string with his eyes, to do at home.

Tracie Kirk, 10, does special exercises designed to help her vision as therapist Cary Shipman supervises.

Treatment area is a rather sterile term for the rooms where Sanet's patients receive their vision therapy. In addition to an array of optical viewing instruments, there are things like a trampoline, a baseball throwback, colored wheels that spin around, balance boards and colored tape laid in a mazelike pattern on the floor.

In the background is the sound of a metronome, which ticks constantly during therapy sessions. Rhythm, says Sanet, is an important component in vision exercises.

On a recent afternoon, one of the patients working to the thythm of the metronome was 13-year-old Tom Cannon, who was moving his hand and eyes in a coordination exercise as a therapist directed him, "Look, ready, touch, down."

In the next room, Gary Beebe, 7, was sitting on a floor by a wooden box, a 2-foot cube with holes large enough for his hands cut in the side. Sitting opposite him was Linda Sanet, the optometrist's wife and one of his staff of therapists, who monitored Gary's progress as he felt various shaped blocks concealed in the box, to match them with blocks he could see on the top of the box.

Tracy Kirk, 10, was standing on a balance board while she followed a symbol on a spinning wheel to help her eyes learn to track better.

The field of developmental optometry is based on the idea that while eyes receive the information, performing the function of sight, the brain interprets the information, performing the function of vision. Optometrists say taht an individual may have eyes that function perfectly in themselves, and will, thus, receive a good score on an eye chart, but may have impaired vision, because the brain is not receiving or interpreting the information correctly.

The person may have impairments such as crossed eyes, an eye that wanders outward, difficulties in focusing, "lazy eye," in which the visual capacity of one eye decreases, and a variety of neurological disorders.

The equipment in Sanet's office is designed to provide specific exercises to retrain the muscles to get the message to the brain properly and the nervous system to help the information be organized correctly in the brain.

In spite of success tales by patients and parents, there are many who discount the value of such therapy as an aid to learning problems. Those most opposed are ophthalmologists. Ophthalmologists, who are MD.s address themselves to the health of the eyes, optometrists perform neither surgery nor provide medicaiton to the eye.

Graves says studies done by ophthalmology and pediatrics associations prove his point.

Master gardener

By JUDY GARRETT

Q. At what stage should I harvest my cantaloupes and honeydews?

A. Harvest cantaloupes when a slight crack encircles the stem where it is attached to the fruit. When lifted by its stem, a ripe cantaloupe will easily separate and a smooth cavity will remain at the stem end. A ripe cantaloupe also has a well-raised grey skin netting. Aroma should be evident if the fruit is ripe. Honeydews should be harvested when a white ground spot (where they rest on the ground) develops. The melon will be yellowish and slightly soft.

Q. We have had some problems with disease on our vegetable plants this year. If we compost these plants, will the disease be killed by the heat generated in our compost pile?

A. It is best not to use diseased plants from the flower or vegetable garden. Although some disease may be killed by heating during compost formation, unless the compost is turned frequently and thoroughly and allowed to remain unused for several years, some of these disease organisms may be returned to the garden with the compost.

Q. What causes the little plants hanging from my spider plant to have brown tips?

A. Your plant could be suffering form any of several problems — low humidity, inadequate moisture, over fertilization. Letting the soil dry out completely between watering could cause brown tips.

Q. Why has my young persimmon tree dropped much of the small fruit?

A. Fruit drop is a common problem in young persimmon trees. Trees should be deep watered and the soil should not be kept too wet or dry. Trees should be fed in later winter or early spring; overfeeding with nitrogen causes excessive growth and excessive fruit drop. Mature plants usually have little problem with fruit drop.

Q. Why do some of my green peppers have a leathery brown patch on the bottoms?

A. This is a physiological disease (blossom-end rot) brought on by poor water management and is usually caused by sudden changes in soil moisture. It is usually worst when plants are growing with high soil moisture and then dry out during a hot spell. Mulching plants will help to maintain uniform moisture conditions. Do not allow plants to become dry in hot weather.

Legal opinion postpones review

By DON GREEN
Staff Writer

A legal opinion Thursday delayed review of the massive Rolling Ridge Estates project in the Chino Hills and set up a new round of hearings on development standards for the plan.

Deputy County Counsel Clark Alsop told the county Planning Commission that the project — 3,486 homes, a regional shopping center and other commercial sites on 1,227 acres — requires a general plan amendment.

The commission called for a hearing by the Environmental Review Board on Aug. 18 before the project returns to the commission on Sept. 16.

The developers, Bramalea and Creative Communities, have already submitted the general plan amendment.

When the commission reviewed the project last week, much of the discussion focused on the development standards for the project and how to change them.

The project — just southwest of the interchange of the Pomona Freeway and Corona Expressway — is in the 18,000-acre area of the Chino Hills specific plan, a comprehensive effort to shape future development in the hills.

Rather than leaving Rolling Ridge Estates in limbo while development standards are reached in the specific plan, the Board of Supervisors adopted interim development guidelines in a general plan amendment last November for this project.

The project falls short of the interim guidelines for grading and for affordable housing. Grading, the moving of 14.5 million cubic yards of earth, sparked many of the objections voiced last week by Chino Hills residents.

The Planning Department staff believed the interim guidelines could be changed without another general plan amendment, because the original general plan amendment envisioned changes in the development standards.

Alsop seemed to be saying the same thing last week, but said Thursday a new amendment is required. Bramalea filed that amendment on Wednesday.

He noted that under two recent changes in state law the general plan amendment will not cause lengthy delay in review of the plan.

Another new law allows general plan amendments and zone changes to be considered at the same hearing.

Beach volleyball attracts crowds, serious athletes

By JERRY CROWE
Copley News Service

LOS ANGELES — You don't have to look very hard to see how beach volleyball has changed in the last few years. Oh, it's still a two-man game and the spectators, especially the ones in those tiny bikinis, are still as much a part of the scene as any of the players.

But the sport, say those who are closely involved, has undergone a tremendous transition.

The crowds are bigger, the media interest is growing annually, selected matches are televised and the players, given a chance to win something more valuable than trophies, are taking the game a little more seriously than they did in the past.

The reason, they say, is money.

Prize money was first introduced to beach volleyball five years ago and has since altered the direction of a sport that didn't take itself nearly as seriously prior to 1976.

"If there wasn't any money in it," says Steve Obradovich of nearby Manhattan Beach, one of the game's top 10 players, "it wouldn't be worth it. It's just not worth it to bust your brains and not have any money waiting for you at the end."

Because a top player now has a chance to earn upward of $20,000 for a summer on the beach, the competition isn't nearly as friendly as it once was.

Whereas the winner of the Santa Cruz Open was decided a few years ago (pre-prize money) by a game of rock, paper and scissors between the finalists when they decided it was too dark to play the championship match, things are a lot more competitive these days.

"There's a fiercer kind of intensity," says Mike Cook, director of the Marine Street Open in Manhattan Beach and volleyball coach at Mira Costa High. "It's almost negative. There's a lot more tooth and gang. There aren't as many smiles as there used to be."

The players, basically, are taking the game more seriously now because of the prize money involved.

"It's become a little more professionalized," admits Rick Shaw of coastal Redondo Beach, another highly ranked player.

"Guys are willing to practice a lot more," says Obradovich.

"It's a lot more intense because there's a reward at the end. The money doesn't really come into it while you're playing, but oh, how sweet it is to have it there at the end."

Steve Obradovich gets ready to hit set by Gary Hooper in volleyball match during Santa Cruz open. The sport of beach volleyball is being taken seriously with professional athletes who attract big crowds.

Nearly $100,000 is available this summer in California. The World Championship of Beach Volleyball, the season - ending event which is held each September at Seaside Lagoon in Redondo Beach, is offering a record $20,000 in prize money this year, with $10,000 of that going to the winners.

"It's beach volleyball's version of the Super Bowl," says Craig Masouka, executive director of the California Pro Beach Tour.

In the five years since its inception, the prize money at the World Championship has quadrupled from $5,000 to $20,000.

But even when it was only $5,000, the winners made a lot more than champions of the past.

In fact, when Dane Selznick combined with Andy Fishburn to win last year's World Championship, he won more money in one weekend ($3,500) than his father Gene did during one of the most successful careers in beach volleyball history.

Reason: There was no prize money available prior to 1976.

Gene Selznick, regarded as one of the sport's all-time greatest players, won some 40 open tournaments during his career, but no money.

And Ron Von Hagen won a record 62 tournaments during his brilliant career, but all he had to show for it when he retired was a roomful of trophies.

Shannon Ryan of suburban Santa Cruz won $500 in June at the Santa Cruz Open just for winning the tournament's bathing beauty contest.

What happened to alter the course of beach volleyball a few years ago is that several sponsors, Jose Cuervo Tequila and Natural Light Beer the most prominent among them, began pouring money into the sport.

Event Concepts, backed by several sponsors, has now put together the Pro Beach Tour, which consists of five tournaments, including the World Championship.

(Not included are the $12,000 Manhattan Open and the $14,000 King of the Beach Tournament, both of which are played at the Manhattan Beach pier. Those tournaments are backed by different sponsors.)

It was Event Concepts, headed by general manager Dave Wilk, which began to actively pursue much-needed media exposure for the sport.

As the exposure grew, so did the public's interest.

According to police estimates, a two-day total of some 15,000 people attended the Santa Cruz Open, the traditional season - opening event on the schedule.

Crowds of that size and larger are common at the Manhattan Open, which despite the growing popularity of the World Championship, may still be the sport's showcase event.

Hispanic world fair, expo set

Special reduced rates on general admission and children's tickets are available to student and youth groups, company employee clubs, social groups, military and other groups planning a visit to the 1981 Hispanic World Fair and Expo.

The event will be held at the Pico Rivera Sports Arena and Fairgrounds Friday, Aug. 21 through Sunday, Aug. 23.

Among the many activities featured are bloodless bullfighting, folkloric musical presentations, Mexican - style rodeos, Domecq horse exhibitions and the crafts and cuisines of such countries as Costa Rica, Argentina, Puerto Rico, Mexico, Brazil and El Salvador.

The expo is open from 10 a.m. to midnight.

The Pico Rivera Sports Arena is located off Interstate 605 via the Rose Hills Exit, on San Gabriel Parkway.

Nature's doors open for the blind

A chuckwalla startles Heidi Cook.

Larry Freeman with pet boa.

A quiet moment is shared by Mike Barrow and Pamela McBeath.

A pine-scented breeze rustled through the hall where Bob Caldwell and hundreds of other campers were finishing their lunches. The sound of trays clattering against the tables filled the air.

It was another beautiful day at Pine Springs Ranch where the towering peaks of the San Jacinto Mountains look down upon green meadows and a pine forest.

But like most of those in the dining hall, Caldwell will never see the mountains. He and other blind campers were finding pleasure in the scents and sounds of the outdoors and in the companionship they had found.

Recently Pine Springs Ranch opened its annual camp for the blind and those attending had the time of their lives.

"Most people are here not because it's free," Caldwell said, "they're here because they're having a ball."

Located 20 miles east of Hemet, the camp is owned by the Seventh-day Adventist Church. Once a year, however, the Christian Braille Foundation's National Camps for Blind Children sponsors a week's worth of activity for those who cannot see. (Although the foundation is an arm of the Seventh-day Adventist Church, campers can be of any religious denomination.)

There's nothing like it, campers said, for no other camps offer such a wide variety of outdoor activities in such an unstructured atmosphere for the blind.

Since 1967 the organization has sponsored such camps designed to develop potential and provide recreational opportunities for the blind.

Because of its popularity, the Pine Springs facility drew an unexpectedly large number of campers this year.

"We were prepared for about 40 campers," said Pine Springs director Dennis Nutter. "We got 120."

Nationwide, more than 14,400 people have attended since the camps were first offered.

When entering the Pine Springs area one steps into an Old West-style town where a town hall and a group of circled covered wagons greet the camper. Antique mining equipment and a large horse corral add to the Western flavor.

Open to the non-handicapped during most of the summer, Pine Springs offers blind campers most of the activities available to the sighted. Archery, horseback riding, swimming, canoeing and baseball were just some of the activities available and those with an adventurous spirit could even take up gold panning or mining.

Because they received the opportunity to partake in activities taken for granted by the non-handicapped campers, there was a feeling of enthusiasm among the campers at Pine Springs last week.

"It's great," said Robin Graff of San Diego as she stood on the archery range. "There's lots of activities and it's not regimented like some camps."

Recreation is the most important aspect of the camp, Nutter said. Pine Springs offers the blind opportunities they might not receive at home. Many of the campers, he added, live in care homes and rarely experience the feel of the outdoors.

To get the feel of Pine Springs, a sighted person had only to sit and observe. Guitars played soft music and groups of blind campers chatted as they roamed the grounds in small groups. Here they were able to gather with others who could share some of the same experiences.

"Some think thoughts that are not really happy thoughts," Caldwell said. "These are the thoughts they live with. Here they talk and they have fun and they're happy."

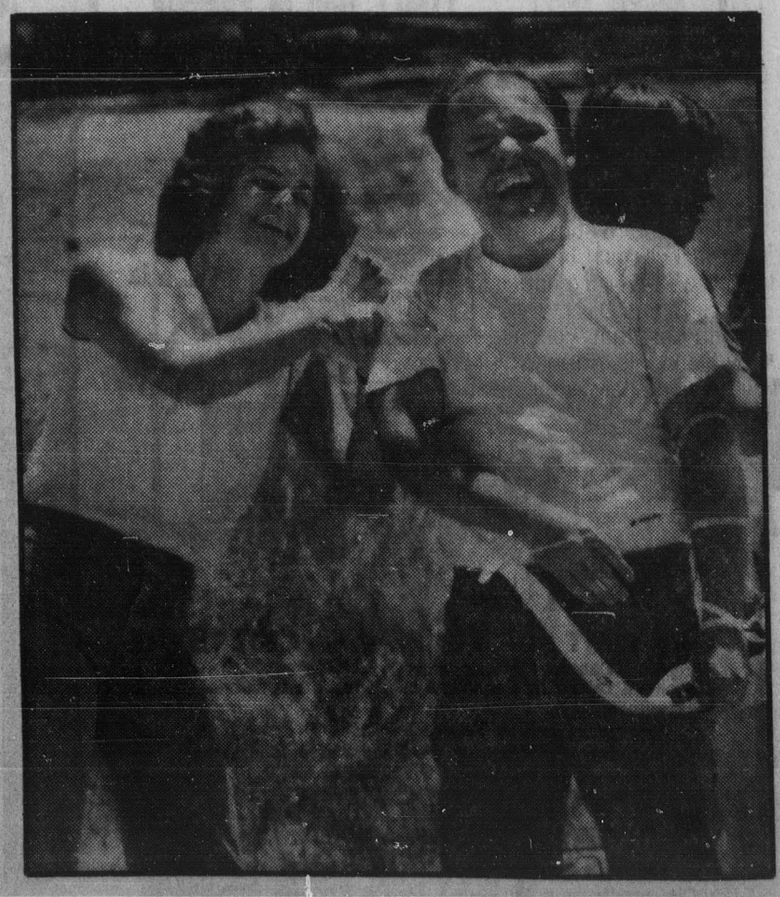

In the morning campers attended breakfast in the large dining hall. Later they attended inspirational services where plenty of singing was called for.
